"Pinkerton is back! A must for story time!"

—American Bookseller

"Kellogg's Great Dane conquered hearts in Pinkerton, Behave! and A Rose for Pinkerton. Now the good-hearted, galumphing dog and his best friend, Rose, the kitten, return in a third adventure, endearingly illustrated by the author-illustrator in action-filled, colorful pictures, as funny as the tale. . . . Another favorite bedtime story."

—Publishers Weekly

★"Pinkerton's return can be welcomed with brio . . . filled with the kind of humor that allows tots to chuckle with glee and older picture-book readers to guffaw through the antics. . . . Bravo, Kellogg!"

—Booklist, starred review

"A day's outing in the woods turns into Kellogg's usual mayhem when Pinkerton and Rose accompany their young owner on a search for ten birds and mammals. They encounter a group of fox-hunting academy students, with predictably funny results. . . . This is a very funny romp." —Children's Book Review Service

Leave at once.
GO AWAY.
BEAT IT.
TAKE OFF!

Rose! Pinkerton! Where are you?

SILENCE! You are disrupting my class!

Excuse us, but our cat and dog were helping me with my homework, and now they're lost in the woods. Have you seen them?

We can't be bothered with stray animals. We're looking for the noble red fox.

I'd like to see a red fox. He'd be number four on my list. Maybe we could all search together.

Certainly not! This is a private hunting class. You'll have to leave.

Tallyho! A fox! A red fox!

Wait! That's not a fox. Your class is chasing our cat!

Stop shooting, you blockheads, and leash your hounds at once!

I said, STOP SHOOTING!

IDIOTS! This is not a fox! Remember Lesson One!

Excuse me, Doctor Kibble, but there's something rapidly approaching through the trees. Could it be a fox?

It's an invasion from outer space. Run for your lives!

It's Pinkerton!

Class, let us leave these fools and return to the hunt.

Well done, class. You have cornered a very rare striped fox.

Excuse me, but he isn't a striped fox.
And I think you'd better not bother him.

Never mind them. We'll find a good spot for our picnic, and then I'll finish my homework.

I'm glad that Pinkerton made friends with the scarlet tanager.

Tallyho! We're hot on the trail!

The process art consists of black line-drawings, black halftones, and full-color washes. The black line is prepared and photographed separately for greater contrast and sharpness.
The full-color washes and the black halftones are prepared with ink, crayons, and paints on the reverse side of the black line-drawing. They are then camera-separated and reproduced as red, blue, yellow, and black halftones.

Ignore her, class, and surround that fox before it escapes!

Well, this has turned out to be a crazy afternoon walk in the woods. It'll be dark soon, and by the time we clean up the picnic, I'm afraid you won't be able to finish that homework list.

Today in school we studied birds and mammals.
Did you know that Pinkerton and Rose are both mammals?

For homework we're supposed to go on a field trip and identify ten different birds and mammals. I'll start right here, and then I'll go to the woods.

Since wild birds and mammals are shy and hard to find,
I'll take Pinkerton and Rose along to help me.

Wait! It's a perfect afternoon for a walk in the woods.
I'll pack a picnic and come too.

Look! My helpers have already spotted the first bird: a scarlet tanager!

Pinkerton! Rose! Come back! We want to identify the birds, not chase them!

Hurry! I think they went this way!

We'll land here. These woods are filled with foxes.
